

2016 A-level Paper 2 : Tourism

Suggested Answer Scheme (Examiners' Comments in italics)

1. How does the opening sentence demonstrate Thomas Cook's success as a businessman? [1]

From the Text	Suggested Paraphrase
There was no such word as 'tourism' when Thomas Cook was born; when he died, his name was synonymous with the tourism industry he had started. (l.1-2)	a. Cook came up with a business in an area that did not exist before/ pioneered a new business b. and turned it into an industry that led to people identifying/associating him with the industry. (Need both parts for 1 mark)

Examiners' comments: A few candidates misread the passage as they believed Cook himself invented the word 'tourist', which was not the case.*

2. Why would taking trips to Biblical sites be 'dear to Cook's heart' (lines 8-9)? [1]

From the Text	Suggested Paraphrase
In 1841 Cook, an impoverished preacher and strictly teetotal... (l.2-3)	Cook was a preacher/religious person and the Biblical sites meant a lot to him/ were important places to him.
... dear to Cook's heart – to Biblical sites in the Holy Land... (l.8-9)

Examiners' comments: Stronger candidates read carefully what was in the earlier paragraph – that Cook was a preacher. Those who did not suggested that Cook simply liked going there or had affection for that area.*

3. In lines 1-14, how does the author illustrate her description of Cook's career as a 'combination of selflessness, personal gain and moral zeal' (line 15)? [3]

From the Text	Suggested Paraphrase
Selflessness ... to offer cheap day trips to the working classes... (l.6-7) He saw what he offered not merely as respite from unremitting drudgery, but also as a way to broaden minds and 'clear them of prejudice'. (l.12-13)	Cook displayed selflessness when he provided inexpensive day outings for the working classes that offered them a break from the dull/mundane routines and to expand their horizon/ view of life. [1]
Personal gain ... with the profits shared between Cook and the meeting organisers. (l.4-5)	He demonstrated personal gain by taking part of the profits/earnings with the organisers when he led the first trip. [1]

Moral zeal ...had a further moral dimension by offering a healthy alternative to what he saw as the greatest evil of his age: alcohol . (l.13-14)	He exhibited moral zeal when he provided the outings as a healthy/ beneficial option to alcohol. [1]
---	---

Examiners' comments: The stronger answers picked each one of the three features of Cook's career and found a clear illustration of it in the designated lines of the passage; weaker answers paraphrased the material without providing a clear link between each of Cook's motivations and the evidence of that motivation.

4. What reasons does the author suggest in lines 17-18 for Cook's tours being popular with women? Use your own words as far as possible. [2]

From the Text	Suggested Paraphrase
...hitherto* constrained by society's disapproval of unaccompanied travel , women found in his escorted trips the rare experience of respectable independence . (l.17-18) (* - means up till now)	Women were not supposed to travel on their own previously but on Cook's tours, they were travelling with someone/ not on their own/ on a guided tour . [1] This made them feel a sense of liberation/ freedom/ autonomy . [1]

Examiners' comments: Most candidates identified the liberating effect of Cook's tour. Some candidates misread the passage and suggested women were now travelling alone, which was almost definitely not what Cook offered.

5. In paragraph 3, what distinctions does the author draw between those who travelled in the eighteenth century and some of 'today's gap-year students' (line 27)? Use your own words as far as possible. [3]

Note: Allow for possible pairing/distinctions, e.g. network with the rich vs helping the underprivileged.

From the Text	Suggested Paraphrase
The eighteenth century sons of Europe elites, fresh from university and unconstrained by time and money, visited revered sites of classical antiquity : the Grand Tour. (l.19-21) Compare this with today's gap-year students who travel before or after university to work on projects in underprivileged communities . (l.27-28)	a. Those who travelled in the eighteenth century travelled to respected places with a grand history/ historical significance , whereas gap-year students travelled to places where the disadvantaged people need help . [1]
They would network with the rich and powerful of other nations before assuming positions of power in their own countries. (l.21-23)	b. The travellers of the past travelled to make contact with influential people whereas the gap-year students become more self-assured with increased knowledge of the world. [1]

Through this they [gap-year students] gain intangible benefits like greater self-confidence and an enhanced awareness of the wider world. (l.28-30)
Similarly, cultural artefacts were shipped home to their mansions to demonstrate their status and impress visitors. (l.25-27) Unlike their aristocratic predecessors, these young men and women return home with only the odd memento and photograph rather than cultural booty, as well as leaving something tangible behind them. (l.30-32)	c. The travellers of the past sent back traditional relics to show where they had travelled whereas the gap-year students brought back pictures and the occasional keepsake/ souvenir. [1]

Examiners' comments: Stronger responses recognised the necessity of making clear distinctions between the behaviour of those who travelled in the eighteenth century and those travelling today. Such responses systematically identified one by one, three aspects of past behaviour and neatly juxtaposed each with its modern-day counterpart. Weaker responses listed a number of features of past travel, followed by a similar list of features of modern-day travel without linking and directly contrasting three of these.

6. Using your own words as far as possible, explain what the author suggests modern tourists are trying to 'escape from' (line 37) and what they hope to 'escape to' (line 38). [2]

From the Text	Suggested Paraphrase
Modern mass travel has arrived, enabling today's holidaymakers to escape from the rigours and routines of work or simply the familiarity of the known. (l.36-38) Others will look further afield for a better climate, or in search of the new: a different landscape, culture, gastronomy (though one motive for some – to consume cheap alcohol and partake in a lurid nightlife – would surely have dismayed Thomas Cook). (l.39-43)	Modern tourists are trying to escape from the daily demands and schedules they face at work or something they are used to. They want to escape to places where - the weather is more pleasant and - to look for different/ fresh things such as scenery, lifestyle and food. 1-2 pts = 1m 3-4 pts = 2m

7. Explain the author's use of the phrase 'what is even worse' in line 61. Use your own words as far as possible. [2]

From the Text	Suggested Paraphrase
They cling resolutely to preconceived expectations, ignorant of , or – what is even worse – indifferent to local sensitivities , which can lead to friction. (l.60-62)	The author felt that it was already wrong of tourists to form their opinions of locals, unaware/uninformed of the indigenous practices . [1]

	However, if they did not care/ are unconcerned about such practices , this would be doing greater injustice to the indigenous population/ this attitude would be more worthy of condemnation . [1]
--	--

Examiners' comments: Stronger responses found many appropriate synonyms for the ignorance of another culture and the indifference towards it displayed by some tourists, and clearly recognised and conveyed the way in which the author felt that one of the two attitudes was much more worthy of condemnation. A significant number of weaker responses either dealt with one attitude only or did not clearly express how the author sees one attitude as significantly worse than the other.

8. Why do you think the author switches to 'we' in the final paragraph? [1]

From the Text	Suggested Paraphrase
And might we be in increasing danger of losing the ability to enjoy holidays? (l.79) Doesn't the whole enterprise of a holiday seem self-defeating if we are still tethered to a virtual desk, unable to cast off the tyranny of timetables and deadlines? (l.84-86)	She wants to show that she is on the same side as the reader and both are in the same situation; show the idea of inclusivity. [1]

9. In the light of the final paragraph, why does the author describe Cook's early customers as 'fortunate' (line 86)? Use your own words as far as possible. [2]

From the Text	Suggested Paraphrase
Their continual use of email and mobile phones to stay abreast of developments at work surely precludes that state of disconnectedness fundamental to genuine relaxation . (l.82-84)	Cook's early customers made a clean break with work/ did not have to worry about work when they were on holiday [1] as they were not bothered by modern technology/ technological devices . [1]

10. Using material from paragraphs 5-7 only (lines 44-78), summarise what the author has to say about the positive and negative effects of tourism on the destinations visited.

Write your summary in no more than 120 words, not counting the opening words which are printed below. Use your own words as far as possible. [8]

One benefit of tourism is ...

From the Text	Suggested Paraphrase
Positive effects of tourism on the destinations visited

a. ,, all destinations gain financially from tourism (l.44)	the monetary returns for the host country.
b. Tourism can benefit local communities by providing employment (l.46)	It enables the indigenous population to find jobs/ work
c. ... albeit often only seasonal work, (l.46-47)	even if they are short-term/ temporary work.
d. i. The increasing number of tourists who are retired ii. mitigates that somewhat (l.47-48)	This rising number of travellers who are not working lessened/ eased the impact
e. ... helping to stem population drift away to larger towns. (l. 48)	helping to stop the flow of people to bigger towns.
f. If traditional industry is declining , (l.48-49)	If long-established/ time-honoured industries are waning/ flagging ,
g. ... tourism offers an alternative which can revitalise communities (l/49)	tourism is another option that can rejuvenate/ invigorate communities
h. ... through investment in infrastructure . (l. 49-50)	through financing/ allocating assets to public works/facilities
i. Cultural assets, heritage and crafts (l.50)	Folk/Traditional/Ethnic customs/ practices
j. ...can be preserved (l.51)	can be conserved
k. ...along with those of protecting endangered wildlife and natural environments . (l. 51-52)	together with flora and fauna that are vanishing/ threatened .
l. ... community pride can be rekindled (l.53)	Dignity/ Honour of a group can be revived/ restored .
Negative effects of tourism on the destinations visited
m. Problems arise from over-reliance on tourism (l.54-55)	Troubles arise from depending too much/ over-dependence on tourism
n. ... as it is vulnerable to political upheaval , (l.55)	as it is prone to political turmoil/ disruption ,
o. ... economic uncertainty or (l.55)	financial insecurity/ problems or
p. ...natural disaster (l.56)	natural calamities .

q. ... tourists... only visiting the obvious, iconic sites... concentrating the economic benefits... in the hands of a few businesses (l.57-58)	Tourists can cause economic returns/ profits to be given to selected enterprises/ companies
r. ... more often international than local concerns (l.58)	that are global brands/ not domestic.
s. i. ...cling resolutely to preconceived expectations... indifferent to local sensitives, ii. which can lead to friction (l.60-62)	Some tourists ignore the cultural practices of the indigenous people, creating animosity.
t. ... spawning a global mono-culture of homogenous shops and outlets (l.68)	Tourism can create a worldwide tradition of standardised/ uniformed stores/markets
u. i. ...which drives out the local and ii. distinctive (l.68-69)	that eliminates the indigenous and what is unique.
v. Where the traditional culture does survive (l.69)_	If the traditional culture continues/ carries on
w. ... it is often as a source of shallow entertainment, a prettified and lifeless version (l.69-70)	it is often reduced to superficial forms of attraction
x. ...of what was once alive and crucial (l.70)	of what was previously bustling/ vibrant and important/ vital
y. ... erosion... is accelerated. (l.71-72)	Tourism hastens/ speeds up the wearing away of tourist sites,
z. ... marred by graffiti (l.75)	that is often tarnished/ damaged by vandalism

29 possible points

(1-2pts = 1m, 3-4pts = 2m, 5-6pts = 3m, 7-8pts = 4m, 9-10pts = 5m, 11-12pts = 6m, 13-14pts = 7m, 15pts and more = 8m)

Examiners' Comments: Stronger responses were characterised by a clear and logical summary of the designated section of the text. Such responses displayed a skilful selection of the relevant material and re-casted it into succinct and fluent prose. The word limit was respected by almost all.

Weaker responses were characterised by a failure to render certain phrases from the text into the candidate's own words. Also, some candidates misread the text. For example, suggesting that tourism causes economic turmoil or national insecurity, rather than it being a casualty of it. Another feature of weaker answers was the use of a significant number of words to make a particular point, resulting in reaching the limit of 120 words without as many points being included as would be the case with greater succinctness.

11. Elizabeth Gorey sees undoubted benefits to tourism but also a growing number of drawbacks. How far do you agree with her observations, relating your arguments to your own experience and that of your society? [10]

Key Ideas from Gorey:

Tourism has brought about many benefits for tourists such as travelling to places to assist underprivileged communities; gaining intangible benefits like greater self-confidence and an enhanced awareness of the wider world; and escaping from the rigours and routine of work to explore new places offering different landscape, culture and food.

It has also benefitted local communities by providing employment; revitalising communities through investments in infrastructure; preserving cultural assets, heritage and crafts; protecting endangered flora and fauna and rekindling community pride.

The drawbacks of tourism include problems arising from the over-reliance on tourism as it is vulnerable to political upheaval, economic uncertainty or natural disasters; the concentration of economic benefits to a few businesses; the failure to broaden tourists' minds; the spawning of a global mono-culture of homogenous shops and outlets that drives out the local and distinctive; the reduction of traditional culture into a source of shallow entertainment; and the acceleration of erosion of popular tourist sites.

Singapore - a tourist destination

The Singapore Tourism Board (STB) actively promotes Singapore as a tourist destination through its many initiatives. These include creating the Merlion, a symbol based on a Singapore mythical legend that became an icon of the Singapore destination; developing tourist attractions such as the Jurong Bird Park and Sentosa; marketing the city as a convention venue and organising events to attract visitors; preserving historic and culturally significant areas such as Chinatown, Little India and Kampong Glam to express Singapore's cultural diversity. The promotion of Singapore as a medical hub amongst others has led to the rise of a more specific type of tourism called medical tourism (it refers to people traveling to a country other than their own to obtain medical treatment).

STB also announced that it will be adopting a new destination branding strategy called YourSingapore. The branding is centred on the concentration of experiences available in Singapore and seeks to enable travellers to customise and personalise their visits according to their preferences.

Examiners' Comments: All candidates were able to draw on some experience of tourism, whether it was in talking about Singapore itself as a tourist destination or in recounting their own travel experiences. Many responses detailed Singapore's efforts to attract visitors and how successful this policy is in creating employment. There was also many expressions of pride in Singapore's multi-racial society.

Many weaker answers were superficial, being comprised lists of examples of what was being done, with little evaluation of the purpose or impact of such developments. Stronger answers saw more complex issues at play and entered into vigorous and heartfelt debate over the pros and cons of a particular modern development.

On a more personal level, some candidates talked eloquently of their experiences of working abroad, while others questioned the worth of such activity, seeing it as fuelled not by altruism but by a desire to burnish a CV (Curriculum Vitae) and thereby improve employment prospects. Others agreed with the author that it was very hard to actually enjoy a holiday with modern technology being so omnipresent, and bemoaned their parents being constantly anxious about the work they were supposedly having a break from. In all of these cases the candidates had chosen an aspect of the original text that chimed with personal experience and the consequence was writing which was vigorous and engaging.

Weaker answers, on the other hand, were somewhat formulaic: a quotation from the text – often far too lengthy – was followed by the unnecessary recasting of the quotation into the candidate's own words; then one or two examples of an aspect of tourism were listed; the paragraph then ended with a bald statement of agreement or disagreement with the author's view. In such cases, evaluation of the author's argument was minimal.

Many candidates demonstrated appropriate and, at times, sophisticated vocabulary and an appreciation of the need for good paragraphing, allied with the use of varied discourse markers.